Farmers, ranchers make Oregon special

When you think of what makes Oregon special, what comes to mind?

Perhaps the majesty of Crater Lake, the lush green of our working forests, or the rugged cliffs along the coast.

But if you’re like us, your thoughts jump straight to Oregon-specific items like “marionberries,” “hazelnuts,” “grass seed,” and “hops.”

Agriculture contributes immensely to Oregon’s unique identity, and is to thank in large part for the quality of life enjoyed by all its residents.

One of the family farmers who raises hazelnuts — the official state nut, for which Oregon is known worldwide — is Bryan Harper, newly elected president of Lane County Farm Bureau and recently appointed member of the Oregon Board of Agriculture.

He’s busy raising hazelnuts on his family’s 125-year-old farm, advocating for Oregon agriculture, and enjoying his favorite pastime: flying an airplane. Read his story on p. 2.

On p. 11, you’ll learn about Dawn Alexander, a fifth grade teacher from Redmond and member of Deschutes County Farm Bureau, and her passion for incorporating agriculture into her classrooms.

The bulk of Oregon’s Bounty is dedicated to a listing of over 300 family farms and ranches who sell their products directly to the public via farm stands, u-picks, CSAs, on-farm events, and booths at farmers markets.

Flying into the future
LANE COUNTY FARM BUREAU PRESIDENT BRYAN HARPER REACHES NEW HEIGHTS ON THE FARM AND IN THE CLOUDS.

By Anne Marie Moss

As soon as you meet young, charismatic Bryan Harper, whatever preconceptions you may have about “the stereotypical farmer” will vanish.

Not only is Harper a fifth-generation farmer, newly elected president of Lane County Farm Bureau, and recent appointee to the Oregon Board of Agriculture — he’s also a pilot, owner of a rare World War II airplane, and former sprinter for the University of Oregon track team.

“People are like, ‘You’re a farmer?’ They think you should have a pitchfork and overalls,” laughed Harper. “I’ve never been one of those people who likes to fit the mold.”

Harper was born in Nairobi, Kenya to mom Rose, who hailed from a small Kenyan village, and dad Warren, a farmer from Junction City, Oregon. When he was just 17 days old, his family journeyed from Africa across oceans and continents to begin a new life in the south Willamette Valley.

At a young age, Harper’s grandmother Janet Chase Harper introduced him to work on the farm, which raised a variety of vegetables and peppermint at the time.

“Grandma was my first crew boss, giving me and my sister a hoe, teaching us how to pull weeds to make sure they don’t come back,” said Harper. “Some of my favorite memories were here, driving tractors, riding 4-wheelers, waking up in the middle of the night to cook peppermint oil. I learned that hard work program and how to make good use of my time from the farm.”

While getting an education in agriculture, Harper was also “raised in an airplane” by his dad, an avid pilot who made frequent use of the grass airstrip on the property.

Harper’s own passion for flying was soon ignited.

“It’s the closest thing to being a bird. In an hour, you can be in a whole new world. It’s my dad’s fault I have this disease of needing to fly,” he said.

Harper was also good at running. His skill got him recruited by the University of Oregon track team, where he specialized in the 400 meters, able to run a 46-second quarter mile.

“It was a good time, and I got to travel all over the country. Some of my friends are the greatest athletes in the world,” he said.

But farming always remained a constant in Harper’s life.

“I’d have 8 a.m. workouts at Hendricks Park in Eugene, then I’d go meet my dad in Harrisburg to have breakfast with all the farmers.”

After he graduated with a degree in psychology in 2012, he sat down with the family to discuss the future of the farm.

“I told them I wanted to do it and was serious about it. So I started being groomed to take the farm over,” he said. Harper began working full-time with his dad, learning how to manage 470 acres of hazelnut orchards.

Last year, he became vice president of Harper Farms Inc., preserving a 125-year family tradition and positioning the business for a promising future.

Happy with hazelnuts
Since its origins in 1891, the farm has raised a wide variety of crops. However, the family decided in 2015 to focus on filberts — aka hazelnuts, aka Oregon’s official state nut.

“Hazelnuts pack a punch,” said Harper. “It’s a diverse, marketable crop. You can eat it raw, roast it, dice it, cream it, butter it. There’s value added, where you can put them in all types of food. I have a huge passion for filberts.”

Oregon’s hazelnut industry is having a moment. With high international demand and robust prices, new orchards have been springing up across the Willamette Valley in recent years. Oregon raises 99% of the hazelnuts grown in the United States, but only represents about 4.5% of the global market; there’s lots of room to grow.

Part of the enthusiasm is due to the success of Jefferson trees, a newer variety developed by Oregon State University that’s designed to be resistant to Eastern Filbert Blight, which Harper calls “cancer for hazelnuts.” The variety has also impressed farmers with its heartiness and high nut yield.

Three years ago, Harper planted his first hazelnut orchard with Jefferson trees.

“This field is kind of sentimental to me,” he said, scanning orderly rows of young trees festooned with small leaf buds.

“It was the first piece of land my grandpa, Tom Harper, bought after he returned from World War II. He was in his 20s and kind of a young, nervous farmer. I’m awful proud of it. Next year I’ll harvest it for the first time.”

The oldest of the farm’s seven hazelnut orchards, containing traditional Barcelona trees, was planted by his great grandfather Jess Harper over 80 years ago.

“If my great grandpa was able to see the yields we’re getting and the prices we’ve been seeing, he would absolutely fall on his face. That’s pretty cool. It took a while, but here we are,” said Harper.

Food for filberts

A big reason for the impressive hazelnut yields is the farm’s focus on nutrition. Unlike grain and vegetable crops that can be rotated to replenish the soil’s nutrients, hazelnut trees are stationary.

To ensure the trees were getting the nutrients they needed — such as nitrogen, phosphorous, and potassium — the farm hired a nutritionist several years ago. The nutritionist walks the orchards with Harper a couple times a year to collect soil and tree tissue samples for testing.

“We’re trying to stay in touch with the soil. You need to have things in balance,” said Harper. “It’s kind of fun, like a big chemistry experiment when you’re mixing all of these different nutrients and feeding them to the trees at the right time.”

And the trees love it.

“You could see the difference in the color and canopy immediately. We were getting big, honking, china-plate leaves,” he said.

Combined with irrigation, the nutrition program has increased nut yields in the orchards, from about 1 ton (net) to between 1.5 and 2 tons.

Hazelnut harvest typically begins in September, when the nuts start to fall from the trees, and lasts into October.

First, a mechanized sweeper moves through the orchard, sweeping nuts into rows on the ground. Next, a picker machine drives through and separates the nuts from sticks, leaves, and other debris. Finally, the hazelnuts are dumped into a truck and hauled to a nearby cleaning facility.

The farm’s hazelnuts are sold to a few Oregon-based processors, and some end up at Zella Foods in Bend, owned and operated by Harper’s aunt.

“Most of our nuts are in shell, but they’ve been cracking those as kernels when there’s a high demand for them,” he said.

Creating a legacy

“I’m constantly looking at ways to try to make things more efficient,” said Harper. “I like things streamlined and simple.”

So far, Harper has modernized the farm’s hazelnut hauling system.
Last fall, Harper (left) was appointed to the 10-member Oregon Board of Agriculture, joining former OFB 1st VP Tracey Liskey (fifth from left) and several other Farm Bureau members. The board advises the Oregon Dept. of Agriculture on policy issues and produces a biennial report on the state of the ag industry.

He purchased two trucks that can bulk-haul nuts after harvest to the cleaning facility. The previous method involved more pieces of equipment and “an army of guys” to do the job.

He’s also interested in upgrading the farm’s infrastructure, starting with a new shop.

For the long term, Harper thinks about ways the business can branch into new markets and “not just be a commodity producer.”

Building on the work and wisdom of the four generations before him, he wants Harper Farms to keep evolving, overcoming new challenges, incorporating new technology, and adapting to new markets.

Said Harper, “In agriculture, you have to be willing to move forward, to look ahead. It’s an exciting time to be a farmer.”

When Bryan Harper was elected president of Lane County Farm Bureau in March, he became the second generation of his family to fill the role.

“My grandpa, Tom Harper, was the first president of Lane County Farm Bureau. It’s pretty cool that I get to carry on that tradition,” said Harper.

Harper’s dad Warren Harper also has a history in Farm Bureau, once serving as chair of the Young Farmers & Ranchers (YF&R) Committee at the county and state level. And his grandmother Janet Chase Harper attended the county’s annual meeting as recently as last year when she was 97 years old.

“Farm Bureau is important because it takes everybody in agriculture standing up together to have a strong voice in the legislature,” said Harper.

“Where else do you have integrated work between people in cattle, dairy, seed crops, hazelnuts? There are a lot of issues that affect all of us. It’s pretty cool getting everyone together to have conversations and help each other out.”
Talking aerial spraying

Bryan Harper, an active “agvocate” and fifth-generation farmer, knows that pesticides and aerial spraying can be hot-button topics for some.

But rather than avoid tough conversations, he’s happy to discuss how and why farmers use these tools, which are tightly regulated at the state and federal level.

“Some people think conventional farmers abuse their privilege and take care of our crops at the expense of the environment. But we’re human beings just like anyone else. We breathe the same air, drink the same water, live on the same soil,” said Harper.

“Our farm has been here for 125 years. You don’t achieve that by abusing the environment.”

Because destructive pests and diseases, like Eastern Filbert Blight, which is “cancer for hazelnuts,” can get into the tops of the trees, the farm hires a professional, licensed pilot to aerial-spray chemicals as needed to keep the orchard healthy.

“Aerial spraying is a legitimate farming tool we use because we have to get up into the canopy, which can be 25 to 40 feet high,” said Harper. “Today’s applicator airplanes are 21st century just like any other piece of equipment. They’ve been developed to be extremely efficient, precise, and use less material. There are a lot of myths out there about how much drift these planes create. It’s just not the case.

“I also use the airplane for our annual filbert worm spray. That’s where I first saw how effective it really was,” he said.

Harper is proactive about reaching out to neighboring farms, some of which are newly established organic operations, about when aerial application is going to occur. He’s a strong promoter of coexistence between different crops and types of farming — something that’s only going to become more essential to meet the demands of a growing population.

“There’s kind of a way of life out in the country when it comes to respect for neighbors and communicating. We certainly try to do our part,” said Harper.

Fast facts about Farm Bureau

Whether you’re a Farm Bureau member through COUNTRY Financial — or a farmer or rancher wanting to protect and strengthen Oregon agriculture — OFB greatly appreciates your membership.

Did you know?

1. Farm Bureau is a true democratic, grassroots, nonprofit organization. OFB’s public policy positions are presented, discussed, and voted upon by family farmers and ranchers from all parts of the state.

2. Farm Bureau was first established in Oregon in 1919 to support wheat growers in Umatilla County.

3. The first official Farm Bureau mission in 1919 was: Educate farmers in the region who were using inefficient wheat-growing practices about the latest technology in wheat cultivation.

4. Oregon Farm Bureau was established as a statewide organization in 1932. The first OFB president was Mac Hoke, a shepherd.

5. The largest general agriculture organization in the state, Oregon Farm Bureau has about 7,000 members professionally engaged in agriculture.

6. Farmer and rancher volunteer leaders comprise OFB’s Board of Directors and issue advisory committees and represent the diversity of Oregon agriculture.

7. OFB believes there is room for, and a need for, all farm sizes and all types of farming: organic, conventional, biotech, and no-tech. Farmers are the best people to decide how to farm and what to raise on their own operations.

8. Farm Bureau is essential because agriculture needs a strong, unified voice in the local, state, and federal level. Otherwise farmers and ranchers would be regulated out of business by people who don’t understand the unique needs of agriculture.

9. Farming is impacted by almost every type of public policy, including laws involving land use, water, labor, taxes, wildlife, transportation, and the environment.

10. With OFB’s many discount programs, it’s easy to recoup the cost of annual membership dues. See p. 20.

11. OFB programs include Young Farmers & Ranchers (YF&R) (p. 13), Century Farm & Ranch (p. 14), Summer Ag Institute for teachers (p. 12), and the Farm Employer Education & Legal Defense Service (FEELDS).

12. Every year at the state and county level, Farm Bureau gives nearly $65,000 worth of scholarships to students across Oregon.

13. Every year, OFB’s Women’s Advisory Council donates close to $4,500 to Oregon’s three Ronald McDonald House Charities.

14. Voting and supporting (farmer) members can get involved at the county Farm Bureau level. Visit oregonfb.org for your county contact or call OFB at 800.334.6323.

15. COUNTRY Financial purchased the Northwest Farm Bureau Insurance Company in 1986, which began the partnership between COUNTRY and OFB.

OFB SOLAR PROGRAM BASICS

- RS Energy is offering discounted pricing on five pre designed systems. Members can save over $150,000!
- RS Energy has a dedicated website, rsenergy.net/ofb where members can find information about the program.
- RS Energy will offer complimentary walk-throughs for all interested members.
- Based on volume of installation, RS Energy will make a financial donation to the young farmers and ranchers program.

DOES SOLAR MAKE FINANCIAL SENSE? YES!

Electricity is increasing between 3-4.5% a year in Oregon each year

There are multiple ways to get a project financed

CASH PURCHASE

This is standard capital purchase that a business contracts with RS Energy to install solar at their place of business. The company is able to utilize the federal tax credit (ITC) of 30 percent as well as an accelerated depreciation schedule associated with solar. The company will then recoup the remaining capital through the reduction of power that they need to purchase from their legacy utility. Payback is typically four to six years!

TAX LEASE

This has a zero out of pocket cost for the farmer. Our banking partners will monetize the tax credit. The power savings usually cover all of the lease payments. The system is then paid for in seven to ten years. Great option if the business does not have a tax liability.

POWER PURCHASE AGREEMENT

Great option if you want RS Energy to own, maintain and operate the system. The business just purchases the electricity that is produced. This option also has a zero out of pocket cost to the business typically.

Contact Billy Sorensen to start benefiting from solar energy.

Teacher wins national ag scholarship

Dawn Alexander, a fifth grade teacher and Deschutes County Farm Bureau Board member, won a 2017 White-Reinhardt scholarship from American Farm Bureau.

Alexander credits Deschutes County Farm Bureau for also making ag literacy a priority. The volunteer-led organization has donated hundreds of “Get Oregonized” textbooks — which focus on how agriculture and natural resources have helped shape Oregon’s history, economy, and culture — and other useful ag-related materials to local schools.

“Most students don’t realize their food and fiber doesn’t start at the store,” said Alexander. “I believe that agricultural literacy must be a subject we teach all of our young students so they will have a deeper understanding of how ag plays a role in their lives and will impact the way they live, now and in their future.”

Alexander’s lessons have ranged from focusing on Oregon’s top agriculture commodities, to hands-on ag activities involving cooking, to inviting local FFA chapters to her classrooms.

This year she’s working with students to plant a school garden and put together a “Seed to Salad” program.

“The plan is to have a salad lunch towards the end of the school year,” said Alexander. “I’m also focusing on ag careers with my students and examining some environmental issues that impact the ag industry.”

To learn more, visit agfoundation.org.

Alexander’s students help younger kids make Farm Bureau Dirt Babies, a fun, hands-on activity that demonstrates how seeds become grass.
Oregon agriculture is an ideal subject for teachers to incorporate into their classrooms. Not only is agriculture rooted in Oregon’s history, culture, and economy, but it also offers innumerable ways to explain lessons in science, math, and social studies.

But if educators have no experience with ag, how can they learn about it? Enter the Summer Ag Institute.

A project of the Oregon Farm Bureau Foundation for Education, SAI is an award-winning, week-long, three-credit, graduate-level class through Oregon State University that educates K-12 teachers with little or no background in agriculture.

Its goal is to help educators use agriculture as a context for teaching core subjects like science, math, social studies, and English. Current, factual, and scientific information about agriculture is presented, and participants are provided with educational materials to help them incorporate what they’ve learned into their lesson plans.

Through SAI, teachers are given first-hand experiences in agriculture. The week includes field trips to farms and ranches, tours of processing plants, and hands-on labs taught by OSU professors. A highlight is an overnight stay on a working farm where the teacher has an opportunity to spend time with a farm family.

“I’ve just been so blown away by this community of farmers. Just the intelligence, the wisdom, the work ethic, and the care for the land was so evident everywhere we visited,” said a teacher who attended SAI. (See the video at oregonfb.org.)

Since its first summer in 1989, SAI has enrolled almost 900 Oregon teachers with the goal of helping to promote the importance of agriculture to society.
Current and aspiring agriculturalists between the ages of 16 and 35 — including FFA members and college students — have a program within Farm Bureau designed specifically for them: YF&R (Young Farmers & Ranchers).

YF&R is a perfect transition from FFA and into Farm Bureau, offering many opportunities for members to develop as farmers, as “agvocates,” and as individuals.

“Anything you’re interested in — leadership development, travel, technology, business management, outreach, education, ag safety, public service, advocacy — you can do it. YF&R has the resources to help you,” said Jenny Freeborn, OFB YF&R vice chair. “You can truly leave a lasting, positive mark on the agriculture industry, and at the same time, develop lifelong friends, grow personally and professionally, and have help achieving dreams and goals.”

So far in 2017, YF&R members have traveled to Pittsburgh to attend the American Farm Bureau FUSION (Farmers United: Skills, Inspiration, Outreach, and Networking) conference, scheduled an ag tour of eastern Oregon, organized a legislative day for FFA students at the Oregon State Capitol, and participated in the Oregon FFA Convention in Redmond.

Other YF&R activities include offering workshops (topics ranging from the business of farming to farm succession to effective communication), organizing the FFA tractor driving contest at the state fair, and hosting statewide leadership competitions for a chance to attend the American Farm Bureau Convention.

“YF&R can help take you anywhere you want to go in the agriculture industry and beyond. The program can be anything you want it to be and can help you fulfill any goals that you have. The possibilities are endless,” said Freeborn.

Visit oregonfb.org (under Programs) to see videos of YF&R members and learn more about the program.
Honoring Oregon’s Century Farms

If you’ve ever wondered about the “sustainability” of Oregon agriculture, you can rest assured that no other industry boasts more longevity, multi-generational family ownership, and commitment to environmental stewardship. In fact, farmers and ranchers have worked the land here since before 1859, the year Oregon achieved statehood.

The Century and Sesquicentennial Farm & Ranch Program, administered by the OFB Foundation for Education, was created to honor the families who are to thank for Oregon agriculture’s rich heritage.

Since the program’s start in 1958, 1,181 Century farms and ranches have been recognized for remaining operational and within the same family for at least 100 years. And 38 farms have earned Sesquicentennial status for reaching the 150-year mark, said Andréa Kuenzi, program coordinator. “Now that’s sustainable by any measure!”

Grossen Farm, member of Washington County Farm Bureau, was one of six family farms that earned a Century Award in 2016.

The farm’s history began in 1904, when Peter Fred Grossen purchased 72 acres in Washington County. After clearing the land of brush, he planted an apple orchard. He then established a dairy with 10 Brown Swiss milking cows, and soon after launched a creamery specializing in Swiss cheese. Peter had immigrated to the United States from Switzerland in 1879 and was eager to bring the cheese-making techniques of his homeland to Oregon.

Today, David Grossen, the great grandson of Peter, farms 25 of the original 72 acres and raises hay, wheat, and Brown Swiss cattle — and carries on the tradition of making exceptional Swiss cheese. Other family members, including OFB Hall of Famer Elmer Grossen, own and operate other parts of the farm.

Farm Bureau welcomes photographers to submit their best images of Oregon agriculture for possible inclusion in the 2018 Oregon’s Bounty Calendar!

The award-winning calendar celebrates all aspects of Oregon agriculture: the products, people, production, enjoyment, landscape — anything that depicts the beauty, technology, culture, appreciation, or tradition of family farming and ranching in this great state.

- Photos must involve farming or ranching in Oregon.
- Photos must be taken in a horizontal format to fit a calendar layout.
- Selected images MUST be available in high-resolution, 300 dpi at a size of at least 11” x 8.5; otherwise they will be too grainy to enlarge.
- Digital images must be submitted in .jpg format.
- Photos with people may require a signed photo release. Please don’t send photos of people you don’t know.
- There is no limit to the number of photos that can be submitted.
- You don’t have to be a Farm Bureau member to participate.

See the 2017 Oregon’s Bounty Calendar at oregonfb.org/calendar.

Submit your images in one of three ways:
- Email your digital photo(s) to annemarie@oregonfb.org.
- Send them via our dropbox at spaces.hightail.com/uplink/Oregon-FarmBureau.
- Mail a thumb drive, CD, or prints to Anne Marie Moss, Oregon Farm Bureau, Suite 200, 1320 Capitol St. NE, Salem, OR 97301.

Include with your submission:
- Your name, address, phone number, and email address
- When and where the photo was taken

The selected image(s) for month pages will appear with a photo credit in the 2018 Oregon’s Bounty calendar, which is sent to over 66,000 Farm Bureau members around the state.

Deadline: September 15, 2017

With roots in Umatilla County dating back to 1919, Oregon Farm Bureau was established as a statewide organization in 1932. The state’s largest general agriculture organization, Farm Bureau represents nearly 7,000 member families who raise all of Oregon’s 225+ agricultural commodities.

Virtually every aspect of public policy touches family agriculture in some way. Farm Bureau uses a time-tested, open, democratic grassroots process to reach its public policy positions. Members in all 36 Oregon counties work to implement these objectives in the legislative arena. The ultimate aim is the sustainability, vitality, viability, and success of Oregon’s agriculture community.

Thank you for supporting Oregon’s family farms and ranches with your Farm Bureau membership! Not yet a member? Join today!
