Honoring heritage, welcoming the future

Agriculture is a blend of tradition and technology, of rich heritage and undaunted optimism about the future.

This issue of Oregon’s Bounty highlights both aspects of this historic, yet innovative, community.

On p. 2, read the story of Matt and Willie Wood, a father-and-son team who run a wheat farm in Umatilla County. With skills and personalities that perfectly complement each other, they’re keeping alive a family tradition that stems back to 1886.

On p. 16, you’ll learn about C & S Waterman Ranch, established in 1917, which recently achieved official Century Status. Today, the ranch is run by the third generation, Charlie and Sharon Waterman, members of the OFB Hall of Fame.

Starting on p. 11 is an entire section devoted to a program for the next generation of Farm Bureau leaders: Young Farmers & Ranchers (YF&R).

Find out more about YF&R, learn about two new Collegiate Farm Bureau chapters, read diary entries from a recent YF&R trip to Canada, and get the story of how YF&R Committee Chair Jenny Freeborn won second place in the 2018 National Discussion Meet.

On p. 17, you’ll find the Oregon’s Bounty listing of over 300 family farms and ranches who sell their products directly to the public via farm stands, u-picks, CSAs, on-farm events, and booths at farmers’ markets.

Learn where to buy seasonal fruits, veggies, flowers, nuts, meat, cheese, and more directly from family farmers — or find Oregon’s Bounty online at oregonfb.org to do a specific product search.

All of these stands are owned by Farm Bureau members who strive to grow the highest-quality, most delicious food possible. Enjoy agriculture’s bounty!
The arid, sparsely populated Columbia Plateau, located along the state’s northern border, is home to Oregon wheat country. Acres upon acres of wheat fields sprawl across rolling, hilly terrain; the wind can reach 60 miles per hour; and the unfettered view spans from the Blue Mountains to the east to the distant peak of Mt. Hood to the west.

It’s here, in a town called Helix, population 181, where Matt Wood farms with his son Willie. Together they’re keeping alive a family tradition that stems back to 1886.

“Willie’s the sixth generation of my family to grow wheat in Helix. And he had three great grandfathers named William, one was Wilhelm actually, who were wheat farmers. It’s in our blood,” said Matt.

Besides being a farmer, Matt serves on the OFB Board of Directors and is a member of Umatilla-Morrow County Farm Bureau.

But those aren’t all of his claims to fame.

“Whenever I meet someone and they ask what I do, I say, ‘I’m Matt Wood. I’m a carpenter, a farmer, and a grave digger. Used to be part-owner of a tavern. And that’s all true, but we gave the tavern to the bartender,’” he said.

Loquacious with an encyclopedic knowledge of local history and lore – and baseball – Matt does construction work along with farming 700 acres. And he does indeed serve on the local cemetery board and has dug many a grave in his 21 years as a volunteer. He also pens a monthly column for the East Oregonian called “View from a tractor.”

Mild-mannered and taciturn, 21-year-old Willie is able to farm full-time on 1,400 acres, which includes a custom hay business that he launched while still in high school. He’s a recent graduate of Blue Mountain Community College, where he earned a degree in crop production.

The Woods’ personalities couldn’t be more different, which makes them perfect complements to one another. The same goes for their farming.

“We’re inextricably connected because we own some equipment together,” said Matt.

Matt owns two of the three combines used for wheat harvest, “but I own all the service rigs,” said Willie. He also owns most of the haying equipment.

“Theoretically, we could each farm in our own right, maybe-kinda. But it works a whole heck of a lot better if we have a cooperative effort,” said Matt.

Working in wheat

The Woods’ combined 2,100 acres makes them one of the smaller operations in the region, which is home to wheat farms sprawling over 5,000 acres or more.

Like most farmers in the area, they raise soft white wheat for the Asian market. Customers in Japan, China, and Korea use this variety to make noodles and pastries. In this part of Oregon, strong international trade agreements are extremely important to the local economy.

To help weather the fluctuating price they get for soft white, the Woods also grow dryland hay and Dark Northern Spring wheat, which is used for crackers and bread and is more likely to be consumed domestically.

“And this year we’re experimenting with Austrian winter peas for either seed or cattle feed. We’re excited to see what happens,” said Matt.

Most of the wheat is “winter wheat” that the Woods plant in the fall and harvest in the summer. The fields are planted in a summer fallow rotation, which means every year half the acreage is planted and half is left unseeded to renew the soil and conserve moisture. That’s essential in a region with an average rainfall of a mere 14 inches.

When seeding a field on a steep incline, which is common terrain in Umatilla County, Willie drives the tractor along the contours of the hill, creating horizontal furrows in the ground instead vertical furrows that run downhill. This prevents water runoff and soil erosion after the snow melts or the rain falls.

The Woods use deep-furrow drills when planting, so seeds can access the sub-surface moisture. These grooves also protect the plants from the powerful wind.

“We take soil tests every year and do what we can to promote soil health and build organic matter. It’s not only the right thing to do environmentally, it’s good for my bottom line. The soil is my best asset,” said Matt.

Summer harvest brings long days, and Willie and Matt are out in the fields from daybreak to dark.
“When we’re wheat farming and hay farming at the same time, and there’s only two of us in the crew, it stretches us sometimes,” said Matt.

Deep roots in Umatilla County

With his passion for history, Matt has a sizeable collection of antique farm equipment and local memorabilia.

But among his most prized possessions are black-and-white photos documenting his ancestors’ lives as Umatilla County wheat farmers.

“This is a harvest scene from 1910 of my great, great grandfather Robert Lee Harp about 15 miles from here,” he said pointing to a framed photo. “He was born 100 years ahead of me, and we do the same thing for a living.”

Matt’s path to farming was not a straight trajectory. He wasn’t raised on the farm. After earning a degree in history from Western Oregon University in Monmouth, he planned to attend law school. His grandfather Randy Dorran was running the farm in Helix at that point and was determined to keep it in the family. Randy approached Matt about taking it over some day — and that altered the course of Matt’s life. In 1993, he returned to Umatilla County to learn how to grow wheat with his grandfather and keep his rural heritage alive.

Willie, however, has had the exact opposite experience, spending his entire life in agriculture.

“Farming is all I ever wanted to do since I was small,” he said.

In fact, his high school graduation present was a combine “with a big red bow on it.”

For all of their differences in personality, Matt and Willie make a fantastic team. Besides the bond of being father and son, they share the traits that matter most in running a successful farm: pride in their work, love for the land, and unwavering optimism about the bounty of the next harvest.

Said Matt, “I said this at my neighbor’s funeral: Farming is not just what we do, it’s who we are. It defines the very essence of our being. You get up in the morning, and whatever you do, it’s related to farming. Even if you go down and have coffee with your neighbor, what are you talking about? You’re talking about should I run a 10-inch or 12-inch-space grain drill? Or should I plant this variety or that variety?

“Farming is what makes us tick.”

Willie is the expert mechanic of the two, and his skills are put to use on equipment repairs and repurposing.

The Woods mostly grow soft white wheat for markets in Japan, China, and Korea, which is used to make noodles and pastries.

Farm Bureau gives ag a voice

Whether you’re a Farm Bureau member through COUNTRY Financial — or a farmer or rancher wanting to protect and strengthen Oregon agriculture — OFB greatly appreciates your membership.

Farm Bureau is Oregon’s largest general agriculture advocacy organization, a nonprofit that represents nearly 7,000 farm and ranch families across the state.

A “general” ag organization means that Farm Bureau is inclusive of all of Oregon’s 225+ agricultural commodities, from cattle to caneberries, wheat to wine grapes. All farm and ranch operation sizes are welcome, as are all farming methods: conventional, organic, biotech, and no-tech.

Farm Bureau believes that agriculture is strongest when farmers and ranchers speak with one voice in the public and policymaking arenas. Indeed, there’s more that unites farmers than divides them, not only in terms of love for the land and pride in their work, but also in the mountain of complicated, costly rules and regulations that directly impact their ability to do their jobs.

Besides helping farmers share their perspective in the legislature, Farm Bureau, through its foundation for education, also:

- Gives nearly $70,000 worth of scholarships to students every year through county and state Farm Bureau programs.
- Offers the award-winning Summer Ag Institute to teach teachers about agriculture, so they can incorporate ag topics into their classrooms. The goal is to help a new generation appreciate how much farmers and ranchers contribute to society.
- Administers the award-winning Century Farm & Ranch Program to honor Oregon’s agricultural heritage. (See p. 16.)

Visit Farm Bureau at Ag Fest

Every year thousands of families flock to Oregon Ag Fest to learn about agriculture through fun, educational, hands-on exhibits and entertaining demonstrations.

The OFB Ag Education Committee hosts one of the most popular booths at the event. Kids and adults alike are invited to make their very own Dirt Babies, “a farmer’s version of a Chia Pet,” with the help of friendly Farm Bureau members and FFA volunteers.

The 2018 Oregon Ag Fest will take place April 28-29 at the state fairgrounds in Salem. Kids under 12 get free entry, and parking is free.

Want to volunteer at the Farm Bureau booth? Contact annemarie@oregonfb.org.

On March 19, Farm Bureau members donated $3,400 worth of groceries to Portland’s two Ronald McDonald Houses in celebration of National Ag Week.

“Over the past 30 years, Farm Bureau has donated over $80,000 worth of groceries to Oregon’s three Ronald McDonald Houses. The food is purchased and delivered by family farmers and ranchers,” said Anne Rigor, member of the OFB Women’s Advisory Council, which coordinates the annual event.

“Oregonians from rural communities utilize Ronald McDonald House services more their urban counterparts because they have to travel farther distances to receive medical care,” said Rigor.

The donation to the Bend Ronald McDonald House will take place on June 11.

Leadership program takes farmer to the U.K.

Involvement in Farm Bureau has taken Angi Bailey to many interesting places: Washington D.C., Nashville, San Diego, and New York City, to name a few.

But a trip to the United Kingdom and Brussels in March took it to a whole other level.

Bailey, a nursery owner and member of Multnomah County Farm Bureau, journeyed “across the pond” as part of the prestigious Partners in Advocacy Leadership (PAL) program through the American Farm Bureau.

“It was interesting, sometimes mind-boggling, to learn how the U.K. is preparing to leave the European Union in 2019. There are significant challenges facing government officials as they develop and implement a completely new farm policy,” said Bailey.

The U.K. trip was the third of four class modules over the two-year PAL program. The class of 10 Farm Bureau members has also visited New York City, where curriculum focused on agriculture/consumer relations, and Washington D.C. to learn about U.S. farm policy. The last trip will be to St. Louis some time this summer.

No matter where Bailey goes, when she talks to fellow farmers and ranchers, she’s struck by how many common challenges, joys, and values they share.

“What stood out to me during the U.K. trip was how British and U.S. farmers face so many of the same issues. Trade, immigration, biotechnology, and pesticides all were topics that came up during our Brexit conversations with farmers, farm advocates, and policy developers. Nuances might exist, but the underlying issues are very similar indeed,” said Bailey.

The PAL curriculum is a high-level, executive training program that prepares farmer and rancher participants to represent agriculture in the media, public speaking, congressional testimony, and other advocacy arenas. Bailey was one of only 10 participants chosen after a national application process.

“As I work through the PAL program, trips like this provide depth to my perspective on Oregon agriculture, the importance of being engaged in the ag community, and the value in unlearning what you thought were your personal limits,” said Bailey. “All of these make me a better leader and a stronger advocate for Oregon’s natural resource communities.”
YF&R — Young Farmers & Ranchers — is a group within Farm Bureau specifically for agriculture producers between the ages of 16 and 35.

YF&R is a natural progression after FFA and a great way for young people to get introduced into Farm Bureau, Oregon’s largest general agriculture advocacy organization.

Why should you join?

Protect & promote Oregon agriculture: Learn how public policy impacts Oregon agriculture, from land use to labor laws — and find out how you can make a difference. If farmers don’t stand up for agriculture in the legislature, no one will.

Travel: Get the chance to attend conferences, workshops, and ag tours across the state, from Portland to Klamath Falls, Newport to Ontario. Or travel with YF&R across the country — and world! A recent trip took YF&R to British Columbia, Canada.

Compete: Put your communication and farm management skills to the test through YF&R’s three competitions: the Discussion Meet, Achievement Award, and Excellence in Agriculture.

Give back: YF&R supports next-generation farmers and ranchers through work with FFA, organizing the state FFA tractor driving contest, a legislative tour of the capitol, and events at the Oregon FFA Convention. YF&R also connects with college students via Collegiate Farm Bureau meetings, Collegiate Discussion Meets, and other events.

Have fun! From ski trips to barbecues, YF&R members have a lot of fun. Build true friendships with people who have similar interests, have adventures in Oregon and beyond, and share some laughs. Now what’s better than that?

How to get involved

1. Become a voting, supporting, or student member of Farm Bureau. Get the registration form at oregonfb.org or call 503.399.1701.

2. Email yfr@oregonfb.org or connect with YF&R via Facebook @OregonYFR. A YF&R member will get in touch about the next meeting or event.
Two Collegiate YF&R chapters launched

College students at Oregon State University and in Klamath County can now get involved in Farm Bureau! In the past year, two collegiate chapters have launched and are doing great things.

“Klamath Collegiate Farm Bureau has become the largest, most active student organization on the campus of Klamath Community College. We’re also open to students attending the Oregon Institute of Technology,” said Victoria Flowers, president of Klamath Collegiate Farm Bureau.

“KCFB provides opportunities for students to engage in leadership, educational, and community service activities. We’ve done everything from promoting agriculture, to teaching second-grade students about their food, to collecting donations for the victims of the fires in Northern California.”

A new OSU chapter, which was established in March, is also off to a great start.

“We’re excited to give students at OSU a chance to learn about how the legislature impacts agriculture, along with focusing on leadership and farming. Public policy is part of the picture for any successful farm or ranch, and it’s important to realize that,” said Jonathan Lopez, secretary of the OSU Collegiate Farm Bureau Chapter.

To learn more about the two Collegiate Farm Bureau Chapters in Oregon, email yfr@oregonfb.org or follow YF&R on Facebook @OregonYFR. Find KCFB on Facebook @KlamathCollegiateFarmBureau.

2018 YF&R Leadership Conference

The 2018 Oregon YF&R Leadership Conference is set for Nov. 9-11 and will be held at a location in Central Oregon.

Sixty young farmers and ranchers attended last year’s successful conference in Salem. It’s a fantastic opportunity to learn from ag industry experts, network, and have fun in Farm Bureau!

Follow YF&R on Facebook @OregonYFR for event updates or email yfr@oregonfb.org.
The Young Farmers & Ranchers Program gives its members amazing experiences. Just this March, 15 young Farm Bureau members traveled to the picturesque Fraser Valley in British Columbia as part of an ag tour exchange with Canadian farmers.

OFB asked three travelers to keep a diary while on this international adventure; following are a few excerpts. Read their full diaries, see the trip itinerary, and check out more photos at oregonfb.org/bcdiaries.

From Jonathan Lopez, member of Oregon State University’s Collegiate Farm Bureau Chapter.

The locations we visited were incredible and very diverse. I was astounded to step foot in a nursery that was producing jalapeño peppers and eggplants. The scent of the peppers filled the greenhouse and it was truly a unique experience.

My personal favorite tour stop was Quik’s Flower Farm. I felt an immense amount of pride while examining the daily work being done, because I’m currently taking a plant propagation class at OSU. Every detail that I noticed I had learned about in my class.

From Gabrielle Rossi, member of Multnomah County Farm Bureau

Takeaways from tour of Campbell’s Gold Honey Farm:

- Focused on increasing bee stock.
- Provides contracted extraction/packing services.
- Notices a difference in the mentality of Baby Boomers who want to do everything themselves versus Millennials who are willing to ask for help or delegate certain tasks.
- Retirement hobby that became a full-time job.
- Farm’s goals: Build community, educate, educate, educate!
- Bees are the focal point of ag.
- Found an ancient recipe for mead [an alcoholic beverage made from honey] while studying an old book in college, decided to try it out.
- Wants to encourage building ag back into the classroom.
“If people don’t understand agriculture, how do you expect them to support you when they vote on policies?”

From Stefani Evers, Capital Press, Marion County Farm Bureau

The majority of the tours scheduled were in Abbotsford, B.C., a very agriculturally diverse area. We were able to tour a Tilapia farm, dairy farm, nursery, honey farm, and a number of farms that based their operations around tourism and reaching out to share their day-to-day life with the public.

One of the most exciting technological advancements to see was the rotary parlor at Gracemar Dairy.

At milking time, cows step onto a slowly-moving platform where a robotic arm cleans their udder and attaches the milking machine. By the time the platform makes a full circle, each cow is finished milking and steps off of the platform. Moving towards a fully automated system drastically decreases the need for labor, and farmers in Canada are dealing with the same labor shortage as we are in the United States.

YF&R’s Freeborn runner up in national contest

Oregon’s Jenny Freeborn, chair of OFB’s Young Farmers & Ranchers (YF&R) Committee, was the second-place winner in the highly competitive National YF&R Discussion Meet at the 2018 American Farm Bureau Annual Convention in Nashville in January.

“Making the Final Four of this competition was literally a dream come true for me. It’s something I’ve wanted to do since I was 15 years old and participated in an FFA practice discussion meet,” said Freeborn.

“When my name was announced, it was both the most shocking and proudest moment of my life,” she said.

As runner-up, Freeborn won a new Case IH Farmall 50A tractor, courtesy of Case IH, which was distributed by Ag West Supply in Rickreall.

Freeborn hails from a farm family based in Polk County with deep roots in Farm Bureau. Her father, Dean Freeborn, is a member of the Oregon Farm Bureau board of directors. Her sister, Kathy Hadley, also served as YF&R chair and made it to the Sweet 16 round of the National Discussion Meet in 2016.

Freeborn credits her sister for helping her prepare and stay focused throughout the intense competition.

“I could not have made it to the Final Four, or through the contest, without Kathy’s help, love, and support, and my parents’ lifelong dedication to helping me succeed and participate in Farm Bureau,” said Freeborn.

The YF&R Discussion Meet simulates a committee meeting in which active discussion and participation are expected. Participants are evaluated on their ability to exchange ideas and information on a predetermined topic, and come up with possible solutions using the tools and programs that Farm Bureau offers.

When Charlie Waterman’s grandparents Charlie Frank (C.F.) and Mabel Waterman established the family ranch in 1917, only 8 percent of the U.S. population had telephones and the toggle light switch was the latest in modern technology.

For keeping the ranch in business and within the family for 100 years, C & S Waterman Ranch in Bandon was honored with official Century Ranch status through the Oregon Century Farm & Ranch Program in 2017.

“Even though ranching has changed drastically over the last 100 years, the Waterman family’s love of the land will ensure that the ranching and timber operation continues,” said Sharon Waterman, who along with her husband Charlie, are members of the OFB Hall of Fame and Coos-Curry County Farm Bureau. Sharon also serves as OFB 1st vice president.

“If regulations don’t put the agriculture and timber industries out of business, our goal is that the family will be able to continue this heritage for generations to come,” she said.

The earliest crops on Waterman Ranch were dairy cows, beef cattle, sheep, chickens, pasture, hay, oats, timber, and Easter lilies.

Over time, the family transitioned into focusing exclusively on cattle and sheep, and planted trees in the more rugged areas of the property for timber harvest. Hay is also still grown on the ranch.

The Century and Sesquicentennial Farm & Ranch Program, administered by the OFB Foundation for Education, was created to honor the families who are to thank for Oregon agriculture’s rich heritage.

Since the program’s start in 1958, 1,200 Century farms and ranches have been recognized for remaining operational and within the same family for at least 100 years. Thirty-nine farms have earned Sesquicentennial status for reaching the 150-year mark.

With roots in Umatilla County dating back to 1919, Oregon Farm Bureau was established as a statewide organization in 1932. The state’s largest general agriculture organization, Farm Bureau represents nearly 7,000 member families who raise all of Oregon’s 225+ ag commodities.

Virtually every aspect of public policy touches family agriculture in some way. Farm Bureau uses a time-tested, open, democratic grassroots process to reach its public policy positions. Members from all 36 Oregon counties work to implement these objectives in the legislative arena. The goal is to strengthen the sustainability, vitality, and viability of Oregon’s agriculture community.

Thank you for supporting Oregon’s family farms and ranches with your Farm Bureau membership. Not yet a member? Join today!
