A visit to an Oregon cattle ranch

One of the reasons we love Oregon agriculture so much is because of its incredible diversity.

Did you know that there are over 225 different types of ag products raised here, from hops to hazelnuts, tulips to tree fruits, milk to marionberries?

West of the Cascade Mountain Range, where most Oregonians live, is where that variety is obvious. Take a drive through Marion County alone, for example, and you can see farms growing blueberries, apples, cherries, green beans, broccoli, nursery products, wine grapes, grass seed, and Christmas trees, to name just a few crops.

But east of the Cascades is different, with a warmer, drier climate and high desert geography. Cattle is king in these parts (and also Oregon’s #2 agricultural commodity by production value, by the way).

For a glimpse of life in remote southeast Oregon, turn to p. 2 to learn about the Otley family and their cattle ranch. Besides raising cows, calves, alfalfa — and two daughters — Shane Otley is OFB’s 3rd vice president, and Crystal serves as vice president of Harney County Farm Bureau.

On the following pages, you’ll discover more exceptional farmers, ranchers, and programs that make Farm Bureau such an effective, respected grassroots organization.

Turn to p. 17 to learn where to buy seasonal fruits, veggies, flowers, nuts, meat, cheese, and more directly from family farmers and ranchers across the state.

Or visit Oregon’s Bounty online at OregonFB.org to do a search for a specific ag product.

All of farm stands listed here are owned by Farm Bureau members who strive to grow the safest, highest quality, most delicious food possible. Get out and enjoy agriculture’s bounty!
On ranchland strewn with sagebrush in remote Harney County, far east of the Cascades where cattle outnumber people 14-to-1, a stampede of baby calves thunders by, the young animals spirited by the prospect of a breakfast of grass hay and alfalfa.

A herd of mostly black Angus-cross cows follows at a more leisurely pace behind a truck with a forklift full of hay bales that winds its way across the muddy ground. The truck, driven by OFB 3rd Vice President Shane Otley, deposits the hay in long rows, around which hungry cattle quickly congregate.

The scene took place on a sunny morning in late March at Otley Land & Cattle, a ranch owned by Shane and Crystal, members of Harney County Farm Bureau.

Shane and Jacee head out on horseback to check on the herd. Watch a video and learn more about the Otleys at OregonFB.org/otleys.

In a couple months, when the grass starts to green, the cattle will move to a different location to feed. If the grazing destination isn’t too far from the family ranch, Shane will saddle up his horse and move the entire herd of 120 animals down the dirt road.

“We let them go at their own pace, let them spread out and be comfortable. Slower is faster,” said Shane. “We get a lot of people stopping with cameras.”

The Otleys purchased their 414-acre ranch in 2013, moving in on Mother’s Day weekend that year.

“It was a cattle ranch, but it was also an alfalfa ranch, so I had to learn alfalfa farming right from the get-go,” said Shane.

Today, the Otleys have a cow-calf operation, an alfalfa farm, and a custom haying business that serves area farmers who grow hay, but who don’t have all the equipment needed to cut, rake, bale, and stack it themselves.
Love from a lucky horseshoe
A third-generation rancher, Shane hails from a “very, very rural town” called Diamond located northwest of Steens Mountain.

The official population of Diamond, Oregon, when Shane was growing up? Two.

But the town is surrounded by ranching families who form a larger community and who, for generations, have sent their children to a one-room schoolhouse for kindergarten through 8th grade.

“When I was in 6th or 7th grade, it was all Otleys at the school. Every student, even the teacher. There were 10 to 12 kids total at the time,” he said.

From a young age, Shane was active on his grandparents’ ranch.

“I learned to rope when I was 8 years old. Cattle and horses were the only things I knew and wanted to do,” he said.

Like many who work in agriculture, Shane attended college. He went to Oregon State University, and after graduating, moved back east to Baker County for a job.

Crystal, meanwhile, earned her certification to become a legal secretary. She didn’t spend her childhood in agriculture, “but everyone I grew up around in North Powder lived on ranches. I’ve always enjoyed horses and animals,” she said.

You could say it was the luck of a horseshoe that brought Crystal and Shane together.

“My sister and I were on the Haines Rodeo Queens Court, and we were needing somebody to shoe our horses,” she said. “And Shane shod horses, so our mutual friend lined us up. He shoed my horse — and that was about the last time he ever got paid to do it,” she laughed.

Ranching & the environment
With the boundless omnipresence of social media these days, even life in sparsely populated Harney County isn’t as isolated as it once was.

The Otleys sometimes find their rural, ag-based community under the scrutiny of people living in Portland or Eugene who have more exposure to vegan restaurants than cattle ranches.

“If someone thinks cattle ranchers just tear up the land, it’s not the truth,” said Shane. “We’re not harming the land, we’re bringing benefit to it and to life every which way you can look at it, from wildlife to human life.”

A perfect example of the symbiotic relationship between cattle and the environment is the Otleys’ participation in a grazing project with the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge and Oregon State University Extension’s Harney County office.

For years, the refuge has grappled with invasive weeds that threaten to overwhelm the native plants and diminish the habitat of birds and other wildlife; in particular, an aggressive, dense weed called reed canarygrass has become a scourge. “Some of these meadows get too much water, which takes out your good grasses, your natives, your clovers. Reed canary comes in and just takes over. It can get up to over 7 feet tall and has a stalk the size of my thumb,” said Shane.

To see if controlled grazing could mitigate the spread of the weed, researchers turned to local ranchers — the people who knew the land better than anyone else.

In Shane’s case, he brought the added benefit of having served not only on the Harney County Weed Board, which works to combat noxious weeds at the local level, but also on the state weed board, which is comprised of seven members appointed by the director of the Oregon Dept. of Agriculture.

For a couple months in the summer, the Otleys’ cattle rotate between plots of land on the refuge. The grazing’s impact on the environment, including on reeds canarygrass, is closely monitored by researchers.

“The grazing has helped,” said Shane. “It’s also shown how cattle can coexist with wildlife. The birds pick at the manure, the bugs. So we’re feeding birds in the refuge at the same time we’re feeding the cattle. They work together."

Other well-known environmental benefits of grazing include reducing the risk of wildfire, fostering grassland diversity, storing carbon in the soil, and improving wildlife habitat.

Respect for water

As it is for all who live in the Harney Basin, water conservation is a part of life for the Otleys.

The ranch voluntarily participates in the Harney Basin Groundwater Conservation Reserve Enhancement Program (CREP).

“It makes land exclusive to livestock grazing. You can’t develop in the basin anymore as far as irrigation for farming. So CREP is good for keeping the land in agricultural production, and also maintaining habitat for the birds and wildlife,” said Shane.

This year, the Otleys plan to experiment with crops that require minimal irrigation, like horseradish, lavender, mint, and 60-day corn.

“We’re looking at alternative crops that will use less water. That’s our goal,” said Crystal.

Shane is also one of a few Farm Bureau leaders around the state who’s involved in place-based water resource planning through the Oregon Water Resources Dept. The goal of the program is to give local communities the opportunity to come together and develop long-term strategies for water use that meet the specific needs of the region’s residents, wildlife, and economy.

Being an advocate for agriculture and participating in collaborative efforts to find solutions to complex challenges is a passion for Shane.

“If you’re helping farmers and ranchers stay in business, or stopping something that’s harmful to agriculture, you know you’re doing your job,” he said.
Meet 4 Farm Bureau leaders

The following Farm Bureau members took over their current leadership roles within the last six months.

Sharon Waterman

Role in Farm Bureau: President of Oregon Farm Bureau, OFB Hall of Fame member

Raises: Cattle, sheep, timber on a Century Ranch in Coos County

What do you love about ranching?
As a livestock producer, I love to see those first lambs and calves running around on the green pastures. Nothing is more satisfying than watching them grow.

It’s amazing to see those last bales of hay in the barns after harvest, knowing you’re done haying for another season.

I love seeing the trees we plant grow, to know that someday our grandchildren will be able to harvest them.

There’s never a dull moment living on a ranch. Every day is different.

What’s one of your biggest challenges working in ag?
In agriculture, one of the biggest challenges is the weather, as we have no control over it. This past year, Oregon suffered through another drought. For those of us raising animals, it took a toll in the weights of our calves and lambs, as well as in forage growth in the fields going into winter.

This winter we had three weeks of really bad weather during lambing and calving season, which caused great losses for ranchers.

What’s something you wish people knew about agriculture?
I wish people understood the relationship between agriculture and the environment. If we as farmers and ranchers didn’t take excellent care of the land, we wouldn’t stay in business. Our fifth-generation ranch, for example, is over 100 years old. We’re sustainable because of our commitment to environmental stewardship.

Farms and ranches create habitat for wildlife. However, I wish the public could understand the amount of income many of us lose each year because our crops and/or livestock are eaten or damaged by geese, elk, deer, coyotes, bear, and wolves.

Why is Farm Bureau important?
Farm Bureau is the largest diversified group of agriculture producers in Oregon. You can’t be in agriculture today without a legislative, regulatory, or legal issue coming forward that directly impacts your farm or ranch.

That’s why we need Farm Bureau. We have excellent OFB staff who understand our needs and work diligently with us to find solutions to the many challenges we face.
Tiffany Harper Monroe

Role in Farm Bureau: President of Lane County Farm Bureau

Raises: Hazelnuts

What do you love about farming?
As a farmer, I have one the most fulfilling and sacred jobs in the world. Not only do I get to be connected to the land, animals, and other natural resources, but I also get to form strong relationships and belong to a community that provides society with food, fiber, fuel, and foliage.

What’s a challenge you face?
There’s a great deal of misunderstanding and misinformation about what farmers, ranchers, and foresters do and why they do it. Sadly, false information overshadows the great care we take and the environmental stewardship we practice every day. This greatly threatens our future and way of life.

What do you wish people knew?
The land is our home, we care for it, and we want it to last for generations. To accomplish this, farmers and ranchers adapt and use sustainable practices to steward our land, air, and water and protect the natural resources we all share.

Why is Farm Bureau important?
Farm Bureau provides a platform for the agricultural community to have a voice, a luxury that we often do not have because less than 1% of Oregonians are farmers and ranchers. Farm Bureau also brings attention to the challenges agriculture faces so we can work with our nation’s leaders to find solutions.

What’s your motto on the farm?
Our legacy and way of life is not done for ourselves, but for the benefit of others and for future generations to come.

Drew Cruickshank

Role in Farm Bureau: President of Malheur County Farm Bureau

Raises: Grain corn, wheat, alfalfa hay, & onions

What do you love about farming?
I love farming because I get to watch seeds turn into producing crops that feed people and livestock.

Agriculture is also a lifestyle not for the faint-hearted. But if you can handle it, it’s worth everything.

What challenges do you face?
Working on succession planning to take over the farm and keep it in the family.

Utilizing technology is also a big challenge as it’s ever-changing and hard to keep up with all that’s coming our way.

What do you wish people knew?
I wish people knew how much work it takes to feed the world. We also aren’t trying to hurt people if we grow GMO crops.

American farmers grow the safest, cleanest, highest quality, and efficiently produced food in the entire world, yet sometimes if feels like we get criticized for everything.

Why is Farm Bureau important?
Farm Bureau is important because it keeps farmers and ranchers informed about what’s going on in the capitol that’s affecting agriculture, forestry, and fisheries. OFB staff helps us get the word out.
about why certain legislation will either benefit or hurt agriculture. Farm Bureau helps us organize and promote what’s good for the Oregon agriculture community.

What’s your motto on the farm?
If you aren’t having fun, then it’s just work — and no one wants to just work.

Woody Wolfe

Role in Farm Bureau:
President of Wallowa County Farm Bureau

Raises:
Alfalfa, timothy hay, & has various livestock enterprises

What do you love about farming?
My favorite thing is being progressive and always trying to change to have a better operation. I like the flexibility of running my own business and finding new directions for the farm.

How is your farm progressive?
I hold two working lands conservation easements. [Editor’s note: A conservation easement is a voluntary legal agreement between a landowner and a land trust or government agency that guarantees the land will never be developed.]

A few years ago, I received a grant from the Oregon Water Resources Dept. to convert over 1,000 acres from flood or hand-line/wheel-line irrigation to pivot irrigation [a very targeted way to apply water that’s a big investment for the farmer].

Our legal irrigation window is May 1 through Sept. 30 in Wallowa County. In this climate, we have a cool, short growing season. Our forage crops grow best May through July, so that’s when I irrigate. I stop irrigating in August and September when the water is most valuable left in stream and least valuable to my crops.

When wheat prices got so low, our farm switched to planting cover crops for cattle grazing. I’ve become very interested in soil health, how the biological properties of soil affect fertility, and energy storage in the soil.

I’m a commissioner for the Oregon Agricultural Heritage Program [which Farm Bureau helped get passed by the state legislature in 2017]. I look at it as a way to preserve the ag land base and culture of the state.

What challenges do you face?
The market conditions that surround production agriculture. Prices are relative to cost and there never seems to be a lot of margin when you combine the two. If crop prices are good, then supplies cost more. If expenses are where you think they should be, then crop prices aren’t great. Innovation is costly, and it sometimes works and sometimes doesn’t.

What do you wish people knew?
I wish that more of the general population understood what it took to create their food and how regulations without foresight affect the survival of ag businesses.

Why is Farm Bureau important?
The number of people in production agriculture is way outnumbered by the number of people who aren’t. Farm Bureau is critical to help lawmakers understand the ag producer’s perspective. There needs to be a strong voice.
So, what’s Farm Bureau exactly?

Whether you’re a Farm Bureau member through COUNTRY Financial — or a farmer or rancher who joined to keep Oregon agriculture vital and viable — OFB greatly appreciates your membership.

Established at the county level in 1919 and the state level in 1932, Farm Bureau is a grassroots, nonpartisan, nonprofit organization representing the depth and breadth of Oregon’s diverse agricultural community. We believe that all commodity types, farming methods, and farm/ranch sizes are valuable and necessary.

Farm Bureau gives our farmer and rancher members a united voice in the public, political, regulatory, and legal arenas. We help these families stay in business and keep doing the job they love.

OFB also offers programs like Young Farmers & Ranchers (see p. 13), Century Farm & Ranch (see p. 15), and Summer Ag Institute (see p. 16), as well as scholarships, ag education outreach, women’s leadership opportunities, and ag health and safety efforts (see p. 10–12).

Check out OregonFB.org to learn more about Farm Bureau’s programs, member benefits, leadership, and policies. Or call us at 503.399.1701.

COUNTRY Financial & Farm Bureau

To understand the partnership between Farm Bureau and COUNTRY Financial, you have to go all the way back to the early 20th century.

That’s when groups of farmers began organizing to promote agriculture and share ideas to improve their methods for raising healthy, high-quality crops and animals. One of the most pressing needs of America’s ag community in the early 1900s was insurance protection. Working in agriculture involved many hazards that were difficult or impossible to insure. State Farm Bureaus around the country, including Oregon, established insurance companies to serve their members.

In 1945, the COUNTRY insurance company was established in Illinois, and by the 1960s, it began to expand into other states. In 1986, COUNTRY purchased the Northwest Farm Bureau Insurance Company from the Oregon, Washington, and Nevada Farm Bureaus.

Today, Oregon Farm Bureau’s relationship with COUNTRY Financial continues in the form of an endorsement of COUNTRY’s offerings.

While providing these much-needed services to farm and ranch families and their neighbors, COUNTRY also supports OFB’s Young Farmers & Ranchers program, funds a $1,000 scholarship for associate members of Farm Bureau, and contributes in many ways to numerous Farm Bureau activities throughout the year.
Meet the OFB Board

The OFB Board of Directors is comprised entirely of volunteer leaders: 22 family farmers and ranchers who take time away from their fields and livestock to guide Farm Bureau’s work at the state level.

Our board members come from all regions of the state and represent a wide variety of ag commodities, farming methods, and operation sizes.

We appreciate their leadership in, passion for, and dedication to Farm Bureau and our work to keep Oregon agriculture vital, viable, and sustainable.

• Jenny Freeborn is chair of the state Young Farmers & Ranchers Committee and is from a multigenerational farm in Polk County.
• 2nd VP Brian Glaser raises grass seed, vegetables, and a variety of specialty seeds in Linn County.
• President Sharon Waterman raises cattle, sheep, and timber in Coos County.
• 1st VP Barb Iverson raises grass seed, vetch seed, clover seed, squash, table and wine grapes, tulips, and industrial hemp in Clackamas County.
• 4th VP and chair of the Women’s Advisory Council Janice Flegel raises cattle and hay in Crook County.
• 3rd VP Shane Otley raises cattle and hay in Harney County.

• Matt Wood, Region 1 (Gilliam, Morrow, Umatilla Counties) is a wheat farmer.
• KC VanNatta, Region 14 (Columbia, Washington Counties) raises timber.
• Pete Postlewait, Region 7 (Clackamas, Multnomah Counties) raises rhubarb, vegetables, and specialty seed crops.
• Jeff Thomas, Region 3 (Grant, Harney Counties) raises tree fruits and vegetables.
• Logan Kerns, Region 2 (Baker, Union, Wallowa Counties) farms in Baker County.
• Ron Bjork, Region 11 (Jackson, Josephine Counties) raises cattle and sugar beets for seed.
• Dean Freeborn, Region 9 (Polk, Yamhill Counties) has a diversified crop farm, including grass seed, canola, and cattle.
• Carol Marie Leuthold, Region 8 (Clatsop, Tillamook Counties) is a dairy farmer.
• Rick Epp, Region 16 (Lane, Douglas Counties) raises cattle, grass hay, and timber.
• Dan Andersen, Region 13 (Malheur County) raises cattle and hay.
• Kevin Westfall, Region 12 (Coos, Curry Counties) raises cattle, hay, and timber.
• John Zielinski, Region 15 (Marion County) raises pear, apples, peaches, and hazelnuts. Does farm-direct sales and agritourism.
• Wade Flegel, Region 5 (Crook, Deschutes, Jefferson, Wheeler Counties) raises cattle and hay.
• Mike McCarthy, Region 6 (Hood River, Sherman, Wasco Counties) raises pears and apples.
• Peter Kenagy, Region 10 (Benton, Lincoln, Linn Counties) raises vegetables for processing, grass seed, vegetable seed, native seed from the Willamette Valley, cover crop seed, goats, and timber.
• Dave Dillon is OFB’s Executive Vice President.
• Lyndon Kerns, Region 4 (Klamath, Lake Counties) raises cattle and hay.

Bailey graduates from PAL

On March 17, Angi Bailey, a second-generation nursery tree farmer and member of Multnomah County Farm Bureau, graduated from the American Farm Bureau Federation’s (AFBF) prestigious Partners in Ag Leadership (PAL) program at a ceremony in Milwaukee.

PAL is an intensive two-year experience that took Bailey from New York to London to Washington, D.C., with lots of real-world homework along the way.

Just a few of Bailey’s tasks were giving media interviews about timely ag issues; meeting with lawmakers to advocate for Oregon farmers and ranchers; talking with consumers in Times Square about hot topics like GMOs, pesticides, and organic farming; and public speaking, including presenting a workshop about how to organize an effective grassroots effort during the 2019 AFBF National Convention in New Orleans in January.

Only 10 farmers and ranchers are chosen nationally to join in this elite leadership program, which seeks to develop confident, effective advocates for agriculture. Bailey was the first Farm Bureau member from Oregon to participate.

Read more about Bailey’s experience at OregonFB.org/pal.

Come to Oregon Ag Fest, April 27-28 at the state fairgrounds in Salem, and visit Farm Bureau’s booth! OFB and FFA members will help attendees make their very own Dirt Baby, a fun, hands-on activity that demonstrates how seed in soil turns into grass. Every summer the OFB Health & Safety Committee launches a public campaign to urge drivers to share the roads safely with slow-moving farm equipment. Sometimes large tractors and trucks must drive on public roads to move between fields, particularly during summer harvest. Farm Bureau supports wildfire victims

Everyone will remember 2018 as a horrible year for wildfires, with 846,411 acres (1,322 square miles) burned across Oregon, resulting in massive losses for rural communities.

One of the regions hardest hit was Wasco and Sherman Counties; wildfire killed a farmer named John Ruby and destroyed over 300,000 acres of wheat fields and valuable grazing land.

Led by Wasco County Farm Bureau, OFB established a relief fund to help some of the farmers and ranchers most impacted.

The fund was kicked off by a generous contribution of $15,000 by Northwest Farm Credit Services, and it ultimately raised over $27,000. The money was given to local farm families who experienced extensive losses not covered by insurance.

“One of the farms we helped lost all of their fences and barnyard buildings in the wildfire,” said Ken Polehn, president of Wasco County Farm Bureau. “Each of the fund recipients was really grateful to have some help.”

Polehn was passionate about getting a fund established to support his local rural community — and he knew Farm Bureau was the place to do it.

“Farm Bureau is a grassroots organization. We’re neighbors helping our neighbors out,” he said.

YF&R — Young Farmers & Ranchers

— is a group within Farm Bureau specifically for agriculture producers between the ages of 16 and 35.

YF&R is a great way to connect with peers who are working in, or are interested in, agriculture. It’s a natural progression from FFA and an excellent introduction into Farm Bureau. Find your tribe in ag!

Why join YF&R?

The YF&R Leadership Conference: Set for Nov. 15-17 in Portland, the 2019 YF&R Leadership Conference is for young Farm Bureau members interested in improving their leadership and communication skills, learning about issues impacting agriculture, gaining business tips from industry experts, and making new friends. Learn more at OregonFB.org/yfrconference.

Travel: Get the chance to attend conferences, social events, and tours across the state and beyond. Recent YF&R events brought members to Redmond, Salem, and Milwaukee, Wisc.

Protect & promote Oregon agriculture: Learn how the legislature impacts Oregon’s ag community — and find out how you can give agriculture a voice. Part of being a successful farmer or rancher today means speaking up and getting involved in public policy. Become an agvocate!

Compete: Put your communication and farm management skills to the test through YF&R’s three competitions: the Discussion Meet, Achievement Award, and Excellence in Agriculture.

Inspire others: YF&R supports next-generation farmers and ranchers by offering opportunities for college students and FFA members.

In March, Oregon YF&R members had a blast at the 2019 American Farm Bureau FUSION Conference in Milwaukee, Wisc.
In 1912, Alfred Josi traveled from Switzerland to Tillamook County to start a new life on the Oregon Coast. Six years later, he homesteaded Wilsonview Dairy Inc.

In 2018, the fourth and fifth generations of Josis celebrated Alfred’s tenacity, vision, and hard work when they achieved official Oregon Century Farm status for keeping the dairy operational, within the family, and on the same land for 100 years.

“I think great-grandpa Alfred would be really proud the dairy is still here,” said Derrick Josi, member of Tillamook County Farm Bureau, who now runs the farm with his dad Don Josi. Today, the dairy milks Jersey cows and has grown from the original 60 acres to 400 acres.

“But I think he’d be surprised that an important part of farming these days is reaching out to folks from urban areas to explain what we do and why we do it,” he said.

Indeed, Alfred would be amazed by how Derrick regularly connects with 36,000 followers via his wildly popular TDF Honest Farming page on Facebook (@tillamookdairyfarmer). Derrick gives the curious public an inside look at the dairy through videos, pictures, and written posts. One of his goals is to show how the farm is dedicated to animal care and environmental stewardship so it will remain for another 100 years.

The award-winning Century and Sesquicentennial Farm & Ranch Program is administered by the OFB Foundation for Education. It was created to honor the hard-working Oregonians, like the Josi family, who are to thank for our state’s rich agricultural heritage.

Since the program’s start in 1958, 1,212 Century farms and ranches have been recognized for remaining operational and within the same family for at least 100 years, while 42 farms have earned Sesquicentennial status for reaching 150 years.

The program is is partially funded through a partnership with OFB, the State Historic Preservation Office, Oregon State University Libraries’ Special Collections & Archives Research Center, and community members throughout Oregon.

Rob Beck, member of Union County Farm Bureau, gave teachers a tour of his sunflower farm during SAI East last summer.

Summer Ag Institute

TEACHING TEACHERS ABOUT AGRICULTURE

Through the Summer Ag Institute (SAI), teachers get an extraordinary opportunity to learn firsthand about the people, processes, and science of Oregon agriculture.

In an action-packed, weeklong session, attendees get to tour farms and ranches, talk with ag producers, do hands-on activities, and become immersed in many aspects of this diverse, always-fascinating industry.

The goal is for educators to leave SAI with ideas, inspiration, and lesson plans for exploring agriculture in their classrooms — and become more effective at teaching students where their food comes from.

There are two SAI sessions to choose from, one on either side of the Cascades. In SAI East, teachers visit farms and ranches raising wheat, sunflowers, seed crops, cattle, and timber. In SAI West, the focus is on Willamette Valley agriculture, which includes vegetables, berries, nuts, hops, Christmas trees, and grass seed.

Farm Bureau is a longtime supporter of SAI, with members volunteering to give tours of their farms and ranches and hosting teachers for an overnight stay (always a highlight for attendees). County Farm Bureaus also sponsor SAI meals and make generous contributions to the program to help keep registration costs low.

Administered through the Oregon Farm Bureau Foundation for Education, SAI is an award-winning, three-credit, graduate-level class through Oregon State University for K-12 teachers.

Since its first summer in 1989, SAI has enrolled around 1,200 Oregon teachers with the goal of helping to promote the importance of agriculture to society. Please spread the word about SAI to the teachers in your life!

SAI West (based in Corvallis):

Folks involved in 4-H and FFA in Harney County will remember 2018 as the year the Otley girls walked away with the top prizes in two of the most competitive livestock categories at the county fair. A steer Sierra raised won the title of Grand Champion Market Beef — and a pig raised by Jacee was declared Grand Champion Market Swine. These girls make us #FarmBureauProud!

Photos sought for 2020 calendar

Farm Bureau welcomes photographers to submit their best images of Oregon agriculture for possible inclusion in the 2020 Oregon’s Bounty Calendar!

The award-winning calendar celebrates all aspects of Oregon agriculture: the products, people, production, enjoyment, landscape — anything that depicts the beauty, technology, culture, appreciation, or tradition of family farming and ranching in this great state.

Learn more and see the Oregon’s Bounty Calendar and at OregonFB.org/calendar.

- Photos must involve farming or ranching in Oregon.
- Photos must be taken in a horizontal format to fit a calendar layout.
- Selected images MUST be available in high-resolution, 300 dpi at a size of at least 11” x 8.5”; otherwise they will be too grainy to enlarge.
- Digital images must be submitted in .jpg format.
- Photos with people may require a signed photo release. Please don’t send photos of people you don’t know.
- There’s no limit to the number of photos you can submit.
- You don’t have to be a Farm Bureau member to participate.

Submit your images in one of three ways:

- Email your digital photo(s) to annemarie@OregonFB.org.
- Send them via our dropbox at spaces.hightail.com/uplink/OregonFarmBureau.
- Mail a thumb drive, CD, or prints to Anne Marie Moss, Oregon Farm Bureau, Suite 200, 1320 Capitol St. NE, Salem, OR 97301.

Include with your submission:

- Your name, address, phone number, and email address
- When and where the photo was taken

The selected image(s) for month pages will appear with a photo credit in the 2020 Oregon’s Bounty Calendar, which is sent to over 67,000 Farm Bureau members around the state.

Deadline: Sept. 15, 2019
